DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Southwest of Bozman is a small brick house called Lostock. Until about 1971 the house and farm were owned by members of the Caulk family for whom the land was patented. The house stands in the midst of the farm which is bounded by the County road on the north, Caulk Cove on the east and by a branch of Leadenham Creek on the west.

Lostock is a small three bay long by two bay deep brick structure with a small one story, one cell frame addition. Its principal facade is the three bay long gable facing north. Stylistically, the house resembles the many houses of the Federal period which have gable facades, such as Wye Heights, Talbot County and several houses in Berlin and Snow Hill, Worcester County. Unlike other houses, there is no entrance on the facade, and it is extremely modest by comparison. There is an entrance on each of its two sides. The facade and east side are laid in Flemish bond above an ogee-molded watertable. (Portions of the watertable on the east side were removed at one time for the installation of a porch, which has also been removed.) The east side has a door and window on the first story with hood above the door and a single window on the second story (the latter being an intrusion subsequent to its original construction). The west side, laid in common bond, has a door and window on its first story and two windows on the second story. A two brick belt course extends around the east, north, and west walls. All windows, thus far mentioned, are equal in size and have six over six sash. On each side of the 'A' roof is a dormer, also later additions. Judging from the doors, west cornice and dormers, the house was remodeled about 1840, which date is farther confirmed by the presence of late Empire mantels in the first story rooms. Two chimneys rise from the south gable wall which is laid in common bond. The kitchen wing is located on the west side of the south wall. Above the west slope of its roof is a small casement window frame. Another is located on the opposite side of the gable wall and was intended to cast light into the closed stair well. A larger window is located in both north and south gable.

The interior contains three rooms, one in the wing and two in the brick portion. The former has a small enclosed stair to the loft located in the northeast corner. A door beneath the stair leads to the west room of the house. The kitchen is in very poor condition and has no exposed architectural detail worthy of mention. The west room has only a 1840 door, two plain windows and an Empire mantel around a blocked fireplace.

The east room is the principal room of the house and has some good wood work of the post-revolutionary period. The stair is located in the southeast corner of the room and is entirely open, although the placement of a small window on the south wall makes it likely that there was a door set even with the living room wall. Beside the stair is a fireplace with a paneled closet on each side bearing a raised panel door with a raised panel above extending into the plaster ceiling. The mantel around the closed-up fireplace is Empire and has columns supporting the shelf. The three windows have paneled window seats, the same type paneling as the closets, however, they lack paneled jambs.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Architecturally, Lostock is a fine example of the hall and parlor plan vernacular house. It differs from the usual plan in that the two fireplaces are on the same wall like Sudler's Seclusion, Somerset County. The former Bryan House near Trappe had a very similar plan and was probably built about the same time, which appears to be the 4th quarter, 18th century. The building is listed in the 1798 tax assessment, belonging to William Caulk. It apparently had the same form in that period, however, there were outbuildings typical of a small farm of that period.

From the approach, Lostock appears similar to Federal period houses of the Eastern Shore, but its gable facade lacks the usual entrance. Only on the two sides are doors to the rooms within. Behind the west room is a small frame wing which may be that mentioned in the 1798 Federal Direct Tax. Lostock is a unique dwelling in Talbot and retains much good original interior trim.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

1-A
L9/F22
1700 According to a deed from Francis Anderton (of Dorchester County) to Ralph Dawson Sr., "Lostock" was originally granted and patented to his father, John Anderton. By this deed, Francis sold 50 acres of his inheritance, with premises, located on the east side of Harris creek. In 1705, Dawson sold these fifty acres and fifty more, all a part of Lostock, to Peter Caulk. Peter added 31 more acres which he bought from John Harrison and his wife Mary. The Dawson family remained in the area. In 1748, Peter Caulk Jr. married Margaret Dawson.

In the 1783 Tax Assessment, John Caulk, the son of Peter Jr., was listed as owner and possessor of a small frame house and 200 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land, a part of Lostock. By 1798, William Caulk, John's son had now built a brick house on the property. This is the one we are concerned with. It was two stories high, measured 26'x30', and had 10 windows. A one story frame kitchen adjoined, 20'x16'. There was a framed quarter, 30' x 16', a logged fowl house, a logged meat house, and a framed store house, all the usual appertances of the working plantation. Like "Saulsbury", a much earlier house, the gable end of "Lostock" is also along the

2-A widest side. According to H. Chandlee Forman, the builder of this house was the Major Caulk who introduced the muscovy duck to America.

1-B
L21/F273
1909 William Caulk's son, John Harrison Caulk, lived here as the heir of his father's estate, and when he died, intestate, in 1851, the property went automatically to his daughter and only heir, Mary S. E. Caulk. She too married a Caulk and devised the farm to their two daughters Mary E. and Sallie B. Caulk.

1-A
L266/F337
1946 The division between these two finally had to be settled in court. In a case of equity, G. Elbert Marshall was appointed trustee to make the sale. The E. S. Adkins and Co., Inc. was

1-A
L288/F76
1950 the buyer. Since this was a building and lumber company, they presumably wanted the farm only for the timber they could cut

1-A

1952 from the 310 acres. Two years later, Fred S. Lewis, a local

1-A
L319/F264
1955 realtor bought it from the Adkins Co. and sold it again soon after to Andrew and Caroline Wiegand. Their ownership also was

1-A
L437/F327
1969 short lived. The next purchasers were Francis and Evelyn Hutson. They were followed by Christian and Naomi Lamberton. The acre-

1-A
F480/F432
1973 age is recorded in Plat #4/F54 as 250. The Lambertons sold a portion of this, 97.876 acres to Mr. and Mrs. Russell E. Train of Washington, D. C.

The old house has not been occupied as a home for some time and is rapidly falling into a serious state of disrepair. It is worthy of a better fate. The frame wing is thought to be the early old dwelling described in the 1783 Tax Assessment as belonging to John Caulk, and we know that the brick portion was built between 1783 and 1798. This is a property that was owned by one family, the Caulks, for over two hundred years. The heritage they have their county, in this quaint, interesting house and the surrounding farm and woodlands deserves to be recognized.
